AUSTRIAN EMPEROR CONTROLS FORTUNE

No Occasion to Find Fault With Administration of Francis Joseph.

BY LA MARQUETTE DE FORTEROY.

VERY Austrian Emperor, while occupying the throne after the attainment of his majority is in control of the enormous private fortune of the historic house of Hapsburg.

It is he who directs its administration, and determines the amount of the allowances to be accorded to the various archdukes and archduchesses of the dynasty, the amount of these allowances depending to a great extent upon the greater or less remoteness of the prince or princess concerned from the succession to the crown. Some of the archdukes and archduchesses have great personal fortunes of their own, independent of the Hapsburg property; such as, for instance, Archduke Frederick and Eugene. Others, again, are wholly dependent upon their allowances from the Hapsburg property. The latter comprises vast estates of agricultural and forest lands, mines, manufacturing industries of every conceivable character, from potteries to distilleries and breweries, also steamship lines, railroad stocks, hotels, and Heaven only knows what else besides.

None of the members of the imperial family have ever found occasion to dispute the decisions or to find fault with the administration of the family property by Emperor Francis Joseph.

But many of them, especially those who have distinguished themselves by their openly manifested hostility to the emperor, have committed the sin of morganatic marriage, and to the Hapsburg property, the Emperor of Hapsburg, fear that when he succeeds to the throne on the death of the present octogenarian monarch, he will lose the advantage thereof to not only diminish or suspend their allowances. Against such action on his part they would have no redress, since there is no court of law to the jurisdiction of which the sovereign could be rendered amenable in the affair.

It is in view of some possibility that several of the members of the imperial family have approached certain big banks both at Vienna and abroad, with the object of selling for a sum of money down, their interests in the Hapsburg family property.

For he commenced his own career as the book-keeper and general factotum of another celebrated demimondaine, known as Blanche d'Antigny, who is so graphically portrayed by Zola as "Nana" in his novel of that name.

Prince Carlo Brancaccio, who arrives in New York to-day from Europe, is half American, his mother, the late Princess Brancaccio, having been a Miss Elizabeth Hickson Field, daughter of Hickson Field, of New York, the late princess, who in her younger days was a great beauty of the blonde type, was one of the two American-born ladies-in-waiting of Queen Margherita, who was very fond of her, and it is no secret that a considerable amount, though not all, of the violent and effectual opposition of the Dowager Queen to the marriage of her daughter, the Princess of the Abruzzi, to Miss Catherine Elkins, was due to the influence of the late Princess Brancaccio.

The Brancaccios are a very ancient Neapolitan family, the founder of which is said to have been a certain Burrhus Brancaccius, who flourished 500 years ago, their dual titles of Castellan of Lustra and of Portici, and the princely title of Ruffano, and of Di Triggiano, from the commencement of the eighteenth century. Prince Carlo is unmarried, about forty-two years of age, an officer of the Italian army, and makes his home with his septuagenarian father in the Brancaccio Palace in Rome. He has, also, a residence in the Riviera in Genoa.

His younger brother, Mark Antonio, received the title of Duke Brancaccio from King Humbert in 1907, and their only sister, Donna Maria, is the wife of Don Francesco Massimino, Prince of Aranch, with whom she spent an entire season in New York and Washington a few years ago, in order to make the acquaintance of the American aristocracy. Her jewels, that occasion attracted a considerable amount of attention. For they were not only very magnificent, but of a historical character, having been presented to her by her mother-in-law, the Princess Massimo, daughter of the royal Duchess de Berry, by her second Neapolitan husband, the Marquis Lucchesi-Palli, and had at one time belonged to Queen Marie Antoinette of France.

The Count Ferdinand Lucchesi-Palli, who for some years past has been acting as consul-general for Italy in Paris, belongs to an extremely old branch of the house of Lucchesi-Palli, and has no Bourbon blood in his veins. The most interesting of them all is undoubtedly the head of the family, Don Enrico, count grand-master of the Duchesse de Berry by that second marriage to her Neapolitan chamberlain which created so great a sensation eighty years ago, putting an end as it did to the royal rising in the West Indies. Don Enrico, who bears the titles of Prince of Campofranco and of Duke della Gravia, is married to Countess Maria Waldeck, daughter of the late Archduke Henry of Austria, and of his second wife, Leopoldine Hoffman, and who after the so sudden death of her parents on the same day at Vienna, was adopted by her father's brother and her sister-in-law, the old Archduke and Archduchess Rainer, who have been bequeathed to her the whole of their very large fortune.

who is in absolute control of the property, and independent of any court of law.

That this application should have been made to the banks constitutes an eloquent proof of the bitterness of the quarrels which have been raging for some time past between Archduke Francis Ferdinand and the Duchess of Hohenberg on the one hand, and on the other most of the remaining archdukes and archduchesses.

It is to be hoped that the readers of Arthur Meyer's new book of reminiscences entitled "Ce Que Je Pense Dire" (What I Can Tell), will not regard it as a true portrait of Francis Ferdinand, but as a true portrait of the man who during the last forty years has been the incarnation of a man who during several decades has been one of the leading journalists and editors on the banks of the Seine. But in order to furnish a background to history, he takes for the purpose the salon of the late Comtesse de Lorraine, and in his reminiscences figure as her guests, and as habitués of her entertainments. In fact, if we are to believe Arthur Meyer, all the political and social life of the empire, the military and ministerial crises, several international alliances, innumerable social successes and executions, etc., were all determined in her salons and under her aegis.

If it were true—which is not the case—it would be singularly unfortunate for France, since the Comtesse de Lorraine was, prior to her marriage, a noted demimondaine, and the wife of the younger, or Saint-Beuve, of that wicked old Emile de Girardin, of Prince Napoleon, (surrounded "Pion"), and of the ill-fated "Pion."

Arthur Meyer is perhaps scarcely qualified to form a correct judgment of the importance of the influence of the Comtesse de Lorraine's salon half life in France during the last half century. For he commenced his own career as the book-keeper and general factotum of another celebrated demimondaine, known as Blanche d'Antigny, who is so graphically portrayed by Zola as "Nana" in his novel of that name.

Prince Carlo Brancaccio, who arrives in New York to-day from Europe, is half American, his mother, the late Princess Brancaccio, having been a Miss Elizabeth Hickson Field, daughter of Hickson Field, of New York, the late princess, who in her younger days was a great beauty of the blonde type, was one of the two American-born ladies-in-waiting of Queen Margherita, who was very fond of her, and it is no secret that a considerable amount, though not all, of the violent and effectual opposition of the Dowager Queen to the marriage of her daughter, the Princess of the Abruzzi, to Miss Catherine Elkins, was due to the influence of the late Princess Brancaccio.

A Word to Women on Health Matters

Women are generally careful about the state of their health, and they are apt to make good use of remedies known as disease preventives. Germicides and antiseptics are included in this class, but the greatest care should be exercised in using any which contains poisons, unless prescribed by a physician.

By reason of its absolute safety and its beneficial results, physicians generally have strongly recommended Tyree's Antiseptic Powder. It is unequalled as a preventive of contagious diseases, and for its use as a domestic and highly efficacious in avoiding infection, healing diseased tissues, ulcers and delicate membrane passages. Ideal and valuable for deodorizing sick rooms and general disinfecting purposes. A 25-cent package makes two gallons standard solution. Sold by druggists everywhere. See for booklet and sample, T. S. Tyree, Chemist, Washington, D. C.
